

Learning Cycle (Kolb, 1984)

Kolb developed a model of learning considered as 'experiential learning' which begins with a concrete experience and learning takes place through a further three stages of reflection, analysis and evaluation. This then leads on to a new experience from the learning and the cycle begins again.

Reference:
Kolb, D.A. (1984). Experiential learning: experience as the source of learning and development. Englewood Cliffs, NJ: Prentice Hall

