Introduction

Public health practitioners can apply for professional registration through the UK Public Health Register by demonstrating competence against the Public Health Practitioner standards.

This directory aims to enable practitioners, practitioner schemes, and commissioners to:

- identify current education and training available for each of the individual Public Health Practitioner Standards and for the eight areas of public health practice.
- appraise which education and training might best suit their needs.

Scope

The directory maps education and training opportunities that support individuals to meet the knowledge base for the UKPHR public health practitioner standards. Knowledge can also be acquired through on-the job learning, attending meetings, conferences, private study and other means. The level of knowledge required for practitioner registration is broadly equivalent to first degree (level 6 in England, Wales and Northern Ireland, level 9-10 in Scotland). The directory aims to include identified education and training opportunities provided in the UK at this level.

Some education and training opportunities that are not aligned to an educational level are included in this directory because they have been identified as useful sources from which practitioners can develop their knowledge base.

Individuals start their career in public health from a range of different backgrounds and start points. The directory includes a limited selection of education and training for individuals at the beginnings of their career or for those considering a career in public health. Opportunities listed at a level below 6 should be built on to be sufficient for practitioner registration.

The directory does not claim to be an exhaustive or comprehensive guide to all education and training opportunities. It is limited to those identified from a review of public health and educational websites, scheme co-ordinators' knowledge and a rapid internet search.

UCAS provides further information about undergraduate degrees in public health, so undergraduate degrees are not listed here. A pilot tool developed by the UK Public Health Register (UKPHR) enables Universities to map Public Health courses against the public health practitioner registration standards. In the future we hope that Universities might share this mapping with prospective students.

How to use the directory

- Review the Public Health Practitioner Standards
- Identify the standards that you have evidence of knowledge for and any gaps. This Self-Assessment tool against the PHP standards may be useful.
- For each standard, consider whether your knowledge is current, or would an update be helpful?
- Use the directory to identify education and training opportunities that might support you to fill any gaps or updates for each area or standard.
- Follow the hyperlinks to find out more about each education and training opportunity.
- Education and training opportunities may also be available through your local scheme.
- Please note that some of the opportunities identified may not be provided at sufficient level required for practitioner registration. However, they may form a foundation from which applicants can build knowledge.

The directory

Education and training opportunities identified for each of the 8 areas and 34 standards for Public Health Standards are listed below.

These education and training opportunities have been identified as having the potential to cover the knowledge base for the specified UKPHR public health practitioner standard. The word potential is used, because some of this training is not specific to public health, however, has the potential to provide the knowledge base for practitioner registration when considered from a public health perspective. In addition, some education and training opportunities cover part of this content, so are marked*.

Other resources

A range of written and other resources that can support acquisition of knowledge has also been mapped against the standards by scheme co-ordinators.

Continuing Professional Development

Registered public health professionals maintain registration by demonstrating ongoing Continuous Professional Development (CPD).

Public health practitioners must keep a CPD record, for example using the practitioner UKPR CPD log or FPH CPD system. Practitioners may find the Faculty of Public Health Tips on Writing Effective Reflective Notes helpful.

CPD opportunities

Examples of CPD opportunities are provided below which may be of interest to all members of the public health workforce. Many are topic based so do not necessarily map directly to the UKPHR practitioner standards, however they may contribute to developing the knowledge base for practitioner registration. Health Education England's e-Learning for Healthcare has a wide range of modules on a variety of public health and other health topics, freely available to those who register with and NHS or OpenAthens account. Some of those most relevant to public health can be accessed through the Population Wellbeing Portal which is freely available to all. A wide range of topics are available, from adolescent health, to alcohol, smoking, behaviour change literacy, domestic abuse, sexual health and much more.

All Our Health is a resource for all health and care professionals to help them use their knowledge, skills and relationships, working with patients and the population to prevent illness, protect health and promote wellbeing.

Training in public health hosts a series of podcasts on a broad range of public health topics.

A list of webinars collated by the North West practitioner scheme, on a wide range of public health topics from a variety of scheme providers.

Local Government Association Public health and prevention webinars.

Supporting information

Public health practitioners

Public health practitioners are key members of the public health workforce who work to influence the health and wellbeing of individuals, groups, communities and populations. They work in a wide range of settings from the NHS and local government to the voluntary and private sectors, across various areas of public health including health improvement, health protection, and health and social care quality. Whilst public health practitioner roles and settings vary, they are united in the aim to protect and improve public health outcomes and reduce health inequalities.

The Faculty of Public Health produces a Public Health Practitioners leaflet.

UKPHR

UK Public Health Register (UKPHR) is an independent, dedicated regulator for public health professionals, including public health practitioners. It particularly regulates those public health professionals who have no other regulatory body. UKPHR's primary objective is to provide public protection by ensuring that only competent public health professionals are registered and that high standards of practice are maintained.

Practitioner Registration

Public Health Practitioner Registration aims to assure the public and employers that multidisciplinary public health practitioners are appropriately qualified and competent. Individuals demonstrate competence against the Public Health Practitioner Standards set by UKPHR. The 34 standards are aligned to the Public Health Knowledge and Skills Framework and focus on eight areas.

Applying for Public Health Practitioner Registration

Individuals that wish to apply for Public Health Practitioner registration must do so through their local scheme and undergo a rigorous and quality assured process of assessment and verification by trained public health professionals.

Local schemes

Local schemes offer a range of support and development programmes, including a range of education and training opportunities with details on their websites.
- East of England
- East Midlands

- London, Kent, Surrey and Sussex
- North East
- North West
- South West of England
- Thames Valley
- Wessex
- West Midlands
- Yorkshire and Humber

Demonstrating knowledge

The UKPHR guidance for applicants assessors and verifiers (section 2.4) and Supporting Information (page 7) has advice on demonstrating knowledge required for the practitioner standards.

- "Applicants are required to demonstrate their knowledge, understanding and application of ALL the standards and provide objective evidence of this.
- …….You must demonstrate how you have gained knowledge that underpins a standard, which has supported the work that you have done. The level of knowledge required is broadly equivalent to a first degree (Level 6 in the Qualifications and Credit Framework, Level 10 in the Scottish Credit and Qualifications Framework).
- It is not necessary for all knowledge to be acquired through formal study; a wider range of sources may be accessed. Knowledge may have been gained through learning on formal, accredited courses, on-the job learning, learning through attending meetings, conferences, private study and other means."

Currency

Applicants should also consider the currency of their knowledge, with further advice in UKPHR guidance for applicants assessors and verifiers (section 2.5)

- "….. it is a requirement that overall half numerically of the items of evidence submitted should be from within 5 years of the date of application for registration to UKPHR (50% rule)."
- Evidence of knowledge, which is drawn from learning undertaken more than 5 years before registration, can be used, but you should always consider providing evidence of how this knowledge has been kept up-to date, for example through CPD.

Organisational mandatory and other training

Most statutory, voluntary and other organisations have mandatory training and other training opportunities available to staff. Many of these can provide the knowledge base for practitioner registration. There may also be development opportunities through local or regional networks such as the NHS Deanery, or Regional HEE workforce development team.
Level is not usually mapped. Assessment, accreditation and quality assurance will vary by organisation.
The list below provides examples, with mapping to UKPHR standards potentially covered, however this is an estimate. Knowledge covered will depend on the content within each individual learning opportunity. It is not intended as an exhaustive list, simply to highlight typical learning opportunities that many organisations provide. Learners are advised to consider what learning opportunities their organisation can offer and how these might contribute to the knowledge requirements for practitioner registration.
